Playing to the online crowd is now the name of the game

If a board game is played at a kitchen table and no one is there to film it, did it really happen?

For generations, toy companies did not bother with such existential questions, content in the knowledge that Parcheesi and Sorry battles rarely left the confines of family game night. But faced with the reality that it's increasingly hard to draw digitally native children — and adults — to nondigital play, toy makers have been developing a new category of board games that embrace, not avoid, our smartphone habits.

Gone are the days of hunched shoulders and rolled dice. Today the focus is on creating moments of zany physical comedy that can translate into viral moments ripe for sharing online — a phenomenon that is contributing to a surge in game sales.

It's called the "YouTube effect." Games have seen a 20 percent spike in sales this year, and are the fastest growing category of toys, and that's before sales during the busy holiday season are tallied, said Juli Lengett, a toy industry analyst with the Games like Speak Out and Fantastic Gymnastics are designed to generate viral moments that can be readily shared.

With an average of 5,000 weekday visitors and 15,000 on the weekend, Boston's winter village is turning City Hall Plaza into Patrons bundled in scarves and sweaters swamped the lines inside the holiday village, while children swished around a giant ice skating loop.

Could this be the once-barren City Hall Plaza that has confounded mayors for decades?

Displayed across that broad expanse of red bricks, the "Boston Winter" village has emerged as a hit this holiday season, organizers say, attracting thousands of visitors, including some who can't help but compare it to similar attractions in New York and Europe.

"It's about time we have something like this," said Kara Levy, a 26-year-old visitor to the village. "I've definitely never seen anything like this at City Hall, only in Europe."

The urban plaza, conceived as a gathering spot for festive occasions, has been the bane of previous mayors who struggled to invigorate it. Former mayor Thomas M. Menino, weary of looking out at "the city's living room," once launched a contest for ideas on how to enliven it, but the reinvention never

Trump calls for greater nuclear capability

Intent of tweet unclear; arsenals have been pared

By Michael D. Shear and James Glanz
NEW YORK TIMES

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — President-elect Donald Trump said Thursday that the United States should greatly "expand its nuclear capability," appearing to suggest an end to decades of efforts by presidents of both parties to reduce the role of nuclear weapons in US defenses and strategy.

Trump's statement, in a mid-afternoon Twitter post, may have been a response to President Vladimir Putin of Russia, who in a speech to his military's leadership in Moscow earlier Thursday vowed to strengthen Russia's nuclear missiles.

Putin said nuclear forces needed to be bolstered so they could "reliably penetrate any existing and prospective missile defense systems," apparently a reference to the Pentagon's efforts to develop systems capable of shooting down nuclear-armed rockets.

Shortly after Putin's comments were reported by the news media, Trump said on Twitter that the United States must "strengthen and expand" its nuclear forces "until such time as the world comes to its senses regarding nukes." He did not

Sampson breaks silence on '01 killings

Statement meant to show remorse before sentencing

By Milton J. Valencia

After 15 years of trials and court proceedings, admitted serial killer Gary Lee Sampson made his first public statement in court Thursday as a jury considers whether to sentence him to death.

He put on his reading glasses, lifted himself from the chair at the defense table in Courtroom 13 of the federal courthouse in South Boston, and addressed the jury in a 45-second statement meant to show remorse for the three murders he committed in one week in 2001.

In 123 words, he noted each life that he took. Jonathan Rizzo, a 19-year-old college student, offered to give him a ride one night that summer. "It hurt me to know I took his life, a life of a young man," Sampson said softly.

Philip McCloskey, a 69-year-old plumber from Taunton, had picked up a hitchhiking Sampson on his way to Weymouth. "I took his life and destroyed his family. I hurt his family and so many more," Sampson said, stumbling over his words.

Later, he killed 59-year-old Robert "El" Wait-
